Legal & Policy

The Federal Trade Commission is educating consumers and businesses about the importance of personal information privacy, including the security of personal information. Under the FTC Act, the Commission guards against unfairness and deception by enforcing companies’ privacy promises in how they collect, use, and secure consumers’ personal information. Under the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, the Commission has implemented rules concerning financial privacy notices and the administrative, technical, and physical safeguarding of personal information. The rules apply to financial institutions, service providers or vendors that provide confidential and private services. The safeguard rule requires businesses that provide a service to financial institutions to take administrative, technical and physical steps to safeguard customers’ non-public personal information.

In addition to the FTC Act and Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, MSI will comply with all applicable federal laws and ordinances expected of a field service provider, including the Sarbanes Oxley Act, Discrimination Employment Act, Executive Order 11246 and the Americans with Disability Act.
